MOSS-SIDE. Gilbert Ainsie was a poor man; and he had been a poor man all the days of his life, which were not few, for his thin hair was now waging grey. He had been born and bred on the small moorland farm which he now occupied; and he hoped to die there as his father and grandfather had done before him, leaving a family just above the more bitter wants of this world. Labour, hard and unremitting had been his lot in life; but although sometimes severely tried he had perer repined; and through all the mist and gloom, and even the etorins that had assailed him, he had lived on from year to year in that celm and resigned contentment which unconsciously clicers the hearthsions of the blameless foor. With his own hands he had plough ed, sowed, and reaped his often scanty harvest assisted, as they grew up, by three sons, who, even in buy bood, were happy to work along with their father in the fields. Out of doors or in, Gilbert Ainslie was never idle: The spade, the shears, the plough-shaff, the sickle, and the flant, all came ready to hands that grasped them well; and not a morsel of food was eaten under his roof, or a garment worn there that was dot hearestly, so wely, monly ear o ed. Gilbert Ainslie was a slave, but it was for them he loved with a sober and deep affection. Mr. Entron, - I have noticed a paragraph in your paper of the 1st instant, relative to women, signed "Benedick," and am resolved as far as my feeble enorts can extend to repel the same. I am of opinion that your correspondent is a disappointed lover, who has of late, to happy." An opinion, to the truth of which I his great dissatisfaction, received the answer "NO" from his sweetheart, and while under the influence of mortified and irritated feelings. wrote the piece alluded to above If he has been so unfortunate as to be answered in the perative by the object he adores, I will say to him in the words of the immortal Shakspeare:

"That man who hath a tongue is no man, If with his tongue, he cannot win a woman.

That women in their nature are more gay and forous than men, Indmit; whether it be that their blood is more refined, or their animal spirits more light. I am unable to say, but vivacity seems to be the gift of women; gravity that of men, and I will say to you, sisters, in the day, and go abroad in the night. The bethe language of the poet,-

RESOLUTIONS!

No more shall sorrow grave my brow With furrows deep as once she did; No more will I supinely bow, For reason, peace, and all ferbid.

I gave my beart away to grief. That of the lender melting kind to And e en I had a fond belief That here was pleasure quite refin'd! The "joy of grieft" tis but a name, Taink ye, it has the pow'r to bless? Beware, not more thy wo inflame; eed not all conqu'ring wretchedness.

I've sunn'd myself in woman's eyes, And press'd her glowing cheek to julie Believ'd her heart collapsing sighs, And thought ber, all in all, divine ;

But time the alchymist, at length Expos'd her wiles, and tore the veil; And reason gathering up her strength, Determin'd truth should hence prevail.

I dropp'il her love ; I'll drop all love Of woman from my houghts and heart; For never can the bosom prove As real, what our bopes impart.

We rise to youth and manbood's prime, And find with grief that ev'ry joy Left by the sweeping scythe of time, It full of gloss, and base alloy.
