SLAVES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

There are upwards of sixty thousand African slaves in the District of Columbia, and there is a considerable number of them in the United States. The slaves are mostly concentrated in the city of Washington, where they are employed in the various branches of the government, and in the manufacturing interests of the country. The slaves are divided into three classes: laborers, domestics, and soldiers. The laborers are employed in the public works, and in the various branches of the government. The domestics are employed in the households of the government officials, and in the various branches of the government. The soldiers are employed in the United States Army, and in the various branches of the government.

The slaves are a peaceable and industrious people, and are well governed by their masters. They are well fed, and are well clothed. They are well educated, and are well disciplined. They are well governed, and are well protected.

The slaves are a valuable resource to the government, and are a valuable resource to the country. They are a valuable resource to the government, and are a valuable resource to the country.
