AMERICAN CIVILIZATION.

From the Ohio Observer.

By Dr. Philo. (Young men's) paper.

In my last letter I mentioned a few points, which I overlooked in my former ones. The following are the most prominent:

1. Independence of the society shall be the basis of the new government. It shall be based on the principles of liberty and equality. The society shall be governed by the constitution and laws of the society, and shall have the power to make and enforce them.

2. The society shall be divided into branches, each with its own officers and institutions. The branches shall be organized in districts, and shall have a right to secede from the society if they shall deem it necessary.

3. The society shall be open to all who shall declare their adherence to its principles. It shall be free from all religious and political influences.

4. The society shall be supported by contributions from its members, and by such other means as may be necessary.

5. The society shall have the power to establish schools, hospitals, and other institutions for the benefit of its members.

6. The society shall have the power to publish a journal, and to engage in other literature and other enterprises for the benefit of its members.

7. The society shall have the power to appoint a committee to investigate the condition of the country, and to send forth missionaries to the heathen nations.

8. The society shall have the power to establish a bank, and to regulate the currency.

9. The society shall have the power to keep the peace, and to maintain a military force for the protection of the society.

10. The society shall have the power to regulate commerce, and to establish a post office.

11. The society shall have the power to make war and peace.

12. The society shall have the power to form alliances with other nations, and to form confederations with other societies.

13. The society shall have the power to establish a national university, and to endow liberal arts colleges in the different states.

14. The society shall have the power to establish a national church, and to endow religious institutions in the different states.

15. The society shall have the power to establish a national school system, and to endow schools in the different states.

16. The society shall have the power to establish a national bank, and to regulate the currency.

17. The society shall have the power to establish a national post office, and to regulate the mail.

18. The society shall have the power to establish a national militia, and to regulate the army.

19. The society shall have the power to establish a national judiciary, and to regulate the courts.

20. The society shall have the power to establish a national executive, and to regulate the executive.

21. The society shall have the power to establish a national legislature, and to regulate the legislature.

22. The society shall have the power to establish a national military, and to regulate the military.

23. The society shall have the power to establish a national police, and to regulate the police.

24. The society shall have the power to establish a national welfare, and to regulate the welfare.

25. The society shall have the power to establish a national education, and to regulate the education.

26. The society shall have the power to establish a national justice, and to regulate the justice.

27. The society shall have the power to establish a national relief, and to regulate the relief.

28. The society shall have the power to establish a national charity, and to regulate the charity.

29. The society shall have the power to establish a national benevolence, and to regulate the benevolence.

30. The society shall have the power to establish a national philanthropy, and to regulate the philanthropy.

31. The society shall have the power to establish a national science, and to regulate the science.

32. The society shall have the power to establish a national art, and to regulate the art.

33. The society shall have the power to establish a national literature, and to regulate the literature.

34. The society shall have the power to establish a national music, and to regulate the music.

35. The society shall have the power to establish a national drama, and to regulate the drama.

36. The society shall have the power to establish a national poetry, and to regulate the poetry.

37. The society shall have the power to establish a national philosophy, and to regulate the philosophy.

38. The society shall have the power to establish a national religion, and to regulate the religion.

39. The society shall have the power to establish a national morality, and to regulate the morality.

40. The society shall have the power to establish a national morality, and to regulate the morality.

41. The society shall have the power to establish a national science, and to regulate the science.

42. The society shall have the power to establish a national art, and to regulate the art.

43. The society shall have the power to establish a national literature, and to regulate the literature.

44. The society shall have the power to establish a national music, and to regulate the music.

45. The society shall have the power to establish a national drama, and to regulate the drama.

46. The society shall have the power to establish a national poetry, and to regulate the poetry.

47. The society shall have the power to establish a national philosophy, and to regulate the philosophy.

48. The society shall have the power to establish a national religion, and to regulate the religion.

49. The society shall have the power to establish a national morality, and to regulate the morality.

50. The society shall have the power to establish a national science, and to regulate the science.

51. The society shall have the power to establish a national art, and to regulate the art.

52. The society shall have the power to establish a national literature, and to regulate the literature.

53. The society shall have the power to establish a national music, and to regulate the music.

54. The society shall have the power to establish a national drama, and to regulate the drama.

55. The society shall have the power to establish a national poetry, and to regulate the poetry.

56. The society shall have the power to establish a national philosophy, and to regulate the philosophy.

57. The society shall have the power to establish a national religion, and to regulate the religion.

58. The society shall have the power to establish a national morality, and to regulate the morality.

59. The society shall have the power to establish a national science, and to regulate the science.

60. The society shall have the power to establish a national art, and to regulate the art.

61. The society shall have the power to establish a national literature, and to regulate the literature.

62. The society shall have the power to establish a national music, and to regulate the music.

63. The society shall have the power to establish a national drama, and to regulate the drama.

64. The society shall have the power to establish a national poetry, and to regulate the poetry.

65. The society shall have the power to establish a national philosophy, and to regulate the philosophy.

66. The society shall have the power to establish a national religion, and to regulate the religion.

67. The society shall have the power to establish a national morality, and to regulate the morality.

68. The society shall have the power to establish a national science, and to regulate the science.

69. The society shall have the power to establish a national art, and to regulate the art.

70. The society shall have the power to establish a national literature, and to regulate the literature.

71. The society shall have the power to establish a national music, and to regulate the music.

72. The society shall have the power to establish a national drama, and to regulate the drama.

73. The society shall have the power to establish a national poetry, and to regulate the poetry.

74. The society shall have the power to establish a national philosophy, and to regulate the philosophy.

75. The society shall have the power to establish a national religion, and to regulate the religion.

76. The society shall have the power to establish a national morality, and to regulate the morality.

77. The society shall have the power to establish a national science, and to regulate the science.
THE HARMONITES. [Rapp's new establishment at Ecce Homo, Ky., a few miles below Lexington, Ky., is getting a start this week.]

At the time of a large frame house, which is at the head of the community, with the usual annexes, a large frame house, and a number of small frame houses, the Harmonites have occupied the property, and are now making their homes there.

The Harmonites, who are of German extraction, have settled on the farm of Mr. W. H. Swann, who has a large from the ground up. They are now making their homes there.

The Harmonites, who are of German extraction, have settled on the farm of Mr. W. H. Swann, who has a large from the ground up. They are now making their homes there.

The Harmonites, who are of German extraction, have settled on the farm of Mr. W. H. Swann, who has a large from the ground up. They are now making their homes there.

The Harmonites, who are of German extraction, have settled on the farm of Mr. W. H. Swann, who has a large from the ground up. They are now making their homes there.

The Harmonites, who are of German extraction, have settled on the farm of Mr. W. H. Swann, who has a large from the ground up. They are now making their homes there.

The Harmonites, who are of German extraction, have settled on the farm of Mr. W. H. Swann, who has a large from the ground up. They are now making their homes there.

The Harmonites, who are of German extraction, have settled on the farm of Mr. W. H. Swann, who has a large from the ground up. They are now making their homes there.
BOARDING & LODGING

Respectfully inform his friends and the public generally, that he has opened his House for the accommodation of respectable persons, desirous of residence in the city, on very reasonable terms. He will be happy to accommodate those who may apply to him, and is prepared to receive such persons as may be desirous of residence in the city.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY

New-York, April 22, 1828.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY

New-York, April 22, 1828.

BOARDING & LODGING

Respectfully inform his friends and the public generally, that he has opened his House for the accommodation of respectable persons, desirous of residence in the city, on very reasonable terms. He will be happy to accommodate those who may apply to him, and is prepared to receive such persons as may be desirous of residence in the city.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY

New-York, April 22, 1828.

THE FREEDOM'S JOURNAL.

DECEMBER 11, 1828.

VOL. II.

NEW-YORK, DECEMBER 11, 1828.

To the Monthly Anti-Slavery Reporter.

SIR:

The Duke of Wellington, however, has always insisted that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments.

The Duke of Wellington, however, has always insisted that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments.

THE FREEDOM'S JOURNAL.

DECEMBER 11, 1828.

VOL. II.

NEW-YORK, DECEMBER 11, 1828.

To the Monthly Anti-Slavery Reporter.

SIR:

The Duke of Wellington, however, has always insisted that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments.

The Duke of Wellington, however, has always insisted that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments.

THE FREEDOM'S JOURNAL.

DECEMBER 11, 1828.

VOL. II.

NEW-YORK, DECEMBER 11, 1828.

To the Monthly Anti-Slavery Reporter.

SIR:

The Duke of Wellington, however, has always insisted that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments.

The Duke of Wellington, however, has always insisted that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments.

THE FREEDOM'S JOURNAL.

DECEMBER 11, 1828.

VOL. II.

NEW-YORK, DECEMBER 11, 1828.

To the Monthly Anti-Slavery Reporter.

SIR:

The Duke of Wellington, however, has always insisted that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments.

The Duke of Wellington, however, has always insisted that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments.

THE FREEDOM'S JOURNAL.

DECEMBER 11, 1828.

VOL. II.

NEW-YORK, DECEMBER 11, 1828.

To the Monthly Anti-Slavery Reporter.

SIR:

The Duke of Wellington, however, has always insisted that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments. In his recent address to the House of Commons, he has again reiterated his views on this subject, and has said that slavery is not only a moral and a political evil, but a moral and a political crime. This is a position which the Duke has consistently maintained throughout his life, and which he has always endeavored to prove by the most convincing arguments.