shall we make the same mistakes again, and point the way to glory and triumph? The next new system of philosophy, as the highest degree of knowledge and of civilization, will be the most useful, if it be well understood, or if men have no knowledge of it. For, without knowledge, there is no virtue, and without virtue there is no happiness. Virtue is the highest good that can be known to men, and the highest happiness is the consequence of it. The only happiness that we can obtain from knowledge is the happiness of the mind, and that is of no use to us in this world. We cannot be happy without knowledge, and we cannot be happy without virtue. Without knowledge, we cannot be happy.

In proportion as the knowledge of the people increases, and in proportion to their freedom, the happiness of the people increases. The knowledge of the people is the basis of their power, and their power is the basis of their happiness. We cannot be happy without knowledge, and we cannot be happy without virtue. Without knowledge, we cannot be happy.

And yet, Mr. President, let us not forget the lessons of the past. The knowledge of the people is the basis of their power, and their power is the basis of their happiness. We cannot be happy without knowledge, and we cannot be happy without virtue. Without knowledge, we cannot be happy.
