

Caddie Woodlawn

Underwear

Under their dresses, young girls in the mid-1800s wore cotton undershirts and petticoats, like those Caddie is wearing here.

Instructions:

1. Print this page on your printer. A color printer will provide the best results.
2. Cut-out the clothes, being careful to include the fold tabs

TIP: Paste the page to heavy paper (such as construction paper)

Caddie Woodlawn

Spring Dress

While holding her doll, Caddie is wearing a soft wool challis (shallee) dress that was worn by a young girl from Monroe, Wisconsin about 1850. The dress is in the textile collection of the Wisconsin Historical Society.

Instructions:

1. Print this page on your printer. A color printer will provide the best results.
2. Cut-out the clothes, being careful to include the fold tabs

TIP: Paste the page to heavy paper (such as construction paper)

Caddie Woodlawn

Berry-Picking Outfit

It looks like Caddie picked daisies for her hair as well as berries! Her cotton dress dates back to the 1860s. The white cotton pinafore that covers her dress and serves as a basket for the berries dates from 1868. Both are in the textile collection of the Wisconsin Historical Society.

Instructions:

1. Print this page on your printer. A color printer will provide the best results.
2. Cut-out the clothes, being careful to include the fold tabs

TIP: Paste the page to heavy paper (such as construction paper)

Caddie Woodlawn

Dress with Wool Cape

Caddie's cotton dress came from Sheffield, England and Mrs. Edward Blinks brought it with her to Maine, Wisconsin about 1855. The wool cape lined with silk was worn by Mary Lydia Greene, who was born in 1860. She wore it from 1868-1870 in Milwaukee. Both the dress and the cape are in the textile collection of the Wisconsin Historical Society.

Instructions:

1. Print this page on your printer. A color printer will provide the best results.
2. Cut-out the clothes, being careful to include the fold tabs

TIP: Paste the page to heavy paper (such as construction paper)